Adenosine does not enhance vasoconstriction elicited by potassium in circular and straight muscle of rabbit aorta. Adenosine (0.2 microM) added to the perfusion fluid produced no effect on basal tone or on a tone raised by 15 mM KCl, whether or not this was added in a cumulatively increasing concentration. In contrast, 0.2 microM adenosine potentiated an increase in tone produced by 0.15 and 0.2 mM ACh. It is suggested that vasoconstriction induced by KCl in rabbit aorta is not mediated by the activation of A2 receptors. It is possible that different adenosine receptors mediate the vasodilation caused by ACh and that vasoconstriction caused by potassium is mediated by a different adenosine receptor.
